

Teri Pritchard loved art at a young age. Born and raised a "California Girl," she began her painting career as a teenager in oil painting classes. Upon moving to North Carolina, she earned her Bachelor of Science in Interior Design with a minor in art at East Carolina University. After painting several large murals for a private school, she was hired to teach art to elementary and high school students where she explored and taught in many mediums, from Play-Doh to pottery to paint. Now retired, she has returned to her love of painting and works with acrylics and watercolors. She enjoys plein air painting and belongs to the artist group "Greenville Brushstrokes." Photographs of architecture, scenery, and people from her travels inspire her. She has exhibited her art work at Kinston Arts Council and at Emerge Gallery in Greenville.
